Group Discussion on Haggai

1. When you think about building something, are you more of a planner, someone who jumps right in, or someone who waits until you have all the right tools? How does that describe the way you approach life?

2. In Haggai 1:5-7, God challenges the people to "give careful thought to your ways." They were busy building their own homes while God's house remained unfinished. What do you think it looks like today to be busy with life but still feel spiritually empty or unsatisfied? Have you ever experienced that tension?

3. The message described us as "living stones" that God is both forming individually and placing together to build something bigger (1 Peter 2:5). How do you think God might be forming you in this season? And where might He have placed you so you can collectively be part of something bigger than yourself?

4. In Haggai 1:12-14, when the people responded to God's invitation, He promised, "I am with you," and stirred their hearts to get to work. How does knowing God is with you change the way you approach something He may be asking you to do, especially when you feel discouraged, uncertain, or unqualified?

5. The message challenged us to build our lives with what lasts: faith, hope, and love (1 Corinthians 13:13). If some of the things we spend our time, energy, and attention building were shaken away, what would you want to know was still standing? Is there an area of your life where you need to shift your focus toward what really matters?

Prayer

Father, thank You that You are always with us. Thank you for shaping us individually and placing us together to build something greater than ourselves. Help us to consider our ways, to let go of what leaves us empty, and to invest our time and energy in what truly matters. Stir our hearts to build lives imprinted with faith, hope, and love, and give us strength to keep building together, trusting that You are with us every step of the way. Amen.
